Grandpa's New Habits

He also wakes up at six every morning and sets off for a walk around the lake with his friends. At first, he felt tired after ten minutes, but he carried on. Now he walks for an hour without stopping. "I feel younger than before," Grandpa says, laughing. Our whole family has followed his example — we have thrown away all the soft drinks in our fridge!

Passage A — The Malayan Tapir

The Malayan tapir is one of the most unusual animals in our rainforests. Its body is black at the front and back, with a large white "blanket" in the middle. This pattern helps it hide in the dark forest at night, because its shape is hard to see. Tapirs are nocturnal: they sleep during the day and look for food at night. They eat leaves, young shoots and fruit, and they use their short, bendy snout to pull leaves from branches.

Baby tapirs look very different from their parents. They are brown, with white stripes and spots, a little like a watermelon. These markings slowly disappear after a few months. Tapirs are also good swimmers and often cool down in rivers.

Sadly, the Malayan tapir is endangered. Its forest home is being cut down for farms and roads, and some tapirs are hit by cars when they cross roads at night. In my opinion, tapirs are the most charming animals in Malaysia, and we must protect them.
